USING SUBMARINES.

Park Benjamin, the writer on naval topics, and Admiral Henry Erben, U. S. N., retired, unite on the theory that the awful destruction wrought upon the Russian navy has been the result of the employment by the Japanese of the submarine torpedo boats. Mr. Benjamin was one of the very first students of naval operations in the far East to lament in print that there were no submarine boats on either side to demonstrate the effectiveness not only of the rattlesnakes of the deep, but the resisting power of battle-ships assailed from beneath. Recent developments have convinced Mr. Benjamin fully that the Japanese have not only constructed several of the rattlesnakes in their own yards without the secret having leaked into the intelligence officers of other nations, but have successfully employed them in attacks upon the Russian fleet.

"There is left in my mind," said Mr. Benjamin, "not the shadow of doubt that the Petropavlovsk was sunk by a Japanese torpedo shot from a Japanese submarine boat that lay in wait for her under the water and sent its projectile straight into the vitals of the Russian. If the ship had run into a floating torpedo her bow would have been blown off and her compartments would have kept her afloat. It is not at all likely that she could have struck a floating mine at such an angle that it would have exploded directly under her magazine and in the only part which would have caused her to turn turtle." Besides Admiral Makaroff was in possession of charts showing the location of all the mines about the harbor. The torpedo that sank the Petropavlovsk was aimed with the precision of an arrow, and I have now not the slightest doubt that it was sent from beneath."

Mr. Benjamin here explained how the photograph of a battleship passing over a submerged boat was taken by the men on the submarine, and said it was probable in this way that the Japanese knew just when to let loose the torpedo so as to hit the battleship near her magazine.

Admiral Erben was of exactly the same opinion as to the cause of the destruction of the battleship.

Mr. Benjamin said he believed, however, that the number of submarines in use by the Japanese navy was limited, and that explained their failure to go into the harbor and attempt to blow up the Russian ship at anchor. They were afraid of losing a single one of them.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident is narrated by John Oliver, of Philadelphia, as follows: "I was in an awful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite, growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. I was advised to use Electric Bitters; to my great joy the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I knew they robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50c, guaranteed at E. S. Leadbeater & Sons' drug store.

THE UNFORTUNATE DIVER.

As has been stated in the Gazette, yesterday afternoon in the presence of several hundred spectators, who had waited for many hours on the shore of the new reservoir at Bonton, N. J., the body of William J. Hoar, the diver who was caught at the bottom of the reservoir in the suction of a big waste pipe on Monday afternoon, was brought to the surface. Dr. Turner, who had waited at the reservoir almost unceasingly since last Monday to attend the divers engaged in the attempt to rescue Hoar, and to attend Hoar had been brought up alive, examined the body and said that Hoar had been dead for three days, having probably died on Tuesday of exhaustion. Superficial examination of the body revealed no injuries resulting from the accident that made Hoar a prisoner and resulted in his death.

Diver J. M. Rice, who had been working to recover Hoar's body, brought it to the surface after a day and a half of hard work. Rice tolled single-handed, and met with no failures in any part of his plan. After having successfully repaired the valve in the waste pipe he fastened the last bolt in the cap of the valve yesterday morning at 10:30 o'clock, and then began to make preparations for the removal from the mouth of the waste pipe the two-ton ball of wood and lead between which and the pipe Hoar's legs were pinned.

When it became known to the hundreds of persons who lined the shore of the reservoir and on top of the dam that this would probably be Rice's last descent before the recovery of the body a hush fell. At 1:05 o'clock Rice, from below, pulled the signal line five times, which meant "all is ready. Haul away!"

All eyes were then on the lines that led from the raft to the living diver and the dead man below the surface. They wavered a little, then the signal line was seen to be jerked sharply and, while the air pumps still worked, pumping air to Rice's and to Hoar's helmet, too, the men on the raft hauled away. In a minute a diver's helmet appeared above the surface. Many hands grasped a form clad in a diver's suit. The crowd could not tell if it was Rice alive or Hoar dead, until the form was seen to be laid gently on the raft. An impulse on the part of the crowd to cheer was crushed, and the hush was unbroken until a signal from Dr. Zeuner on the raft told what everyone had expected—that Hoar was dead.
